

Raindrops and Flowers
FINISH

49

The spikes of blossom that cover the horse chestnut tree when it's in flower are also known as 'candles'.
↑ 49

48

A heavy storm flattens delicate flowers
↓ 2

47

46

45

44

43

42

41

31

32

33

34

35

36

37

38

39

40

Ash flowers look a bit like purple brains bursting out of the buds!
↑ 35

Shiny buttercup petals reflect the orange colour of the pollen making them appear much more golden than they really are.
↑ 45

A splash of rain and you go
↓ to 24

The Japanese love cherry blossom - it is the country's national symbol and they hold flower-viewing parties to celebrate its arrival in spring.
↑ 42

30

29

28

27

26

25

24

23

22

21

The dog rose is a wild rose that's usually found in hedgerows.
↑ 32

You get caught in a light shower
↓ 20 to dry off

11

12

13

14

15

16

17

18

19

20

Dandelions get their name from the French for lion's teeth "dents-de-lion" because of their jagged, teeth-shaped leaves.
↑ 30

Steady drizzle sends you back to 8 to wait until your next turn
↓

A single foxglove stem can have up to 80 flower heads on it!
↑ 25

Cornflowers are often found in wildflower meadows.
↑ 38

10

9

8

7

6

5

4

3

2

Oxeye daisies are taller and have bigger flower heads than the ones found in gardens.
↑ 12

Not all poppies are red - some species are orange, yellow, white, pink, or purple.
↑ 27

Forget-me-nots have tiny flower heads, each with five petals. They prefer to grow in shady areas.
↑ 15

Bluebells can turn a woodland floor into a shimmering blue carpet when they flower.
↑ 19

START